Though I have no personal knowledge of the activities of the Ananda Marga Pracharaka Sangha, what I have learnt from friends whom I esteem has deeply impressed me. I fully appreciate its ideal and objects as well as the work done so far and I wish the institution all success in its noble endeavour.

*I was very happy to meet Acharya Lalanji, one of the organizers of the Ananda Marga Pracharaka Sangha of Purulia district in West Bengal, and to hear from him about the aims and objects of the institution that is being run under the inspiration of Shrii Anandamuurti, who as a great religious teacher has taken up on himself the work of bringing about a spiritual regeneration of the people as the fundamental thing for intellectual and cultural as well as economic progress. All such disinterested aims which are preached in all sincerity and strict rectitude deserve the fullest support of the body-politic. The Samgha has particularly taken in hand the spread of education and the liquidation of illiteracy among our backward classes, particularly Adivasis and others, and this is most laudable line of serving masses. Merely secular education divorced from the moral and spiritual background can never be really helpful to any people in enabling to lead good life, and education is the drawing out of best faculties which are in man to lead a life dedicated to high purpose which can only have a reference to the Ultimate reality. The Indian way of thinking and the Indian way of living, in a word enacted by all sorts of isms which include the fundamentals of life and being, have a value for both India and the world at large and the Samgha has not lost sight of the basic things which suffuse the life and thoughts of India. I can only wish Samgha greatest success in the attainment of mighty ideas it has placed before itself and the problem for, as I see it, mighty ideas it has placed before itself and the problem for, as I see it, our present existence upon Science and Scientific gadgets which development of personality and character, can only bring in chaos and still greater chaos is our individual as well as corporate life, and land us in disaster.
